

ECO221: Principles of Macroeconomics

A study of national income determination, commercial and central banking, money, monetary policy, fiscal policy, economic growth, and the economics of trade and exchange rates. Some knowledge of basic mathematics and algebra, as well as the ability to understand and interpret economic data, is desirable. This course is not a prerequisite for ECO223.

Credit Hour(s): 3

Department: Business and Economics

Semester Offered:

Fall

Spring

Area of Inquiry: Soc & Behav Sciences