

HIS308: History of the Early Republic: 1783-1848

This course is a study of the formative years of the United States. The course covers the early years of government under the Articles of Confederation, the adoption of the United States Constitution, and the political development of the new nation through the Mexican War. Additionally, the course will cover the social, ethnic, economic, intellectual, cultural, and religious transformations which characterized American life in the 1780s-1840s.

Credit Hour(s): 3

Program: History

Semester Offered:

Fall (even)